

Robert Greene - The Art of Seduction (Notes by LoveMusic)

- The information contained in this book is invaluable for seducers, artists, politicians and sellers. The insights in human psychology will reveal why you fall in love, why you might want to seduce others, and how the same tactics can be used on you. It will completely change the way you look at social interactions.
- Unlike pick-up, where a one-night stand is generally the goal, seduction is a long process of exploiting psychological weaknesses in order to make a person fall deeply in love with you. Someone in lust doesn't care much about you, but a person in love will go to the ends of the world for you.
- These notes focus on the practical advice from the book.

INTRODUCTION: THE SEDUCER MENTALITY

- Actors, dandies, and artists use the tactics of seduction to charm and win over their audience and social milieu. People must have charisma, a fascinating presence to keep their audience's attention. Seductive oratory, staging vast spectacles, using theatrical devices, creating a charged physical presence is the essence of charisma.
- Looks do not matter. Seduction is a game of psychology, not beauty.
- Every social and personal interaction is seen as a potential seduction, never a moment to waste. The seducer sees the world as his bedroom.
- Never be self-absorbed: your gaze is directed outward. When you meet someone, the first move is to get inside that person's skin, to see the world through their eyes, gathering information. Then, you strategize and provide focused and individualized attention, aiming at their particular weaknesses. This helps lower resistance and creates physical surrender. Don't improvise or leave this process to chance.
- If we are to change people's opinions, we must act in subtle, subliminal ways. The essence is constant: never be forceful or direct; instead, use pleasure as bait, playing on people's emotions, stirring desire and confusion, inducing psychological surrender.
- What seduces is the effort we expend on their behalf, showing how much we care, how much they are worth. Leaving things to chance is a recipe for disaster.
- Seducers see themselves as providers of pleasure, like bees that gather pollen from some flowers and deliver it to others. They also train themselves to be sensitive to pleasure; feeling pleasure will make it that much easier for you to infect other people.
- A seducer sees all of life as theater, everyone an actor; they can be anyone and can assume many roles. They take pleasure in performing and are not weighed down by their identity, some need to be themselves, or natural. The clothes they wear, the places they take you to, their words and actions, are slightly heightened—not overly theatrical but with a delightful edge of unreality, as if the two of you were living out a piece of fiction or were characters in a film. Seduction is theater in real life, the meeting of illusion and reality. Everyone has insecurities, but seducers manage to ignore them, finding therapy for moments of self-doubt by being absorbed in the world.
- Seducers are completely amoral in their approach to life. It is all a game, an arena for play.
