Introduction

The Riverview Community Hospital is a not-for-profit organization that serves the Riverview community. The hospital has a strong standing in the community as a health service provider. Consumers consistently give the hospital high ratings in customer satisfaction surveys. The hospital is under the threat of losing its customer share because of the acquisition of a local for-profit competitor by a health service chain known for aggressive competition for market share. This situation makes it necessary for the Riverview Community Hospital to evaluate its competitive position in the healthcare sector in the Riverview community.

An evaluation of the three key financial statements of the Riverview Community Hospital revealed several issues. First, the balance sheet showed that the assets of the hospital grew from $39.627 million to $54.275 million between 2005 and 2009. The increase arose because of the acquisition of new plants and equipment. The liabilities of the hospital also grew prominently in the same period from $1.8 million to $4.4 million. The statement of operations of the hospital showed that the hospital created a surplus in the years reviewed. However, the surplus is on a reducing trend. If the trend persists, the hospital will start experiencing deficits within the next three years. The most worrying element of the cash flow statement is the reduction of the net cash flow of the hospital from 7.192 million in 2005 to $3.481 million in 2009. The hospital may not meet its current liabilities such as the payment of wages and the payment of bills to utility providers if this figure keeps falling.

An analysis of the financial performance of the organization using the DuPont Analysis showed that the Return on Equity (ROE) of the hospital comes from the equity multiplier component of the DuPont Equation. This means that the ROE is not sustainable since it is not growing based on sales or increases in the net profit margin (Young, 2009). This means that the hospital is not generating value as an entity. In
