

7. Where on Venus do the creatures live?

The creatures live among the rocks on Venus.

8. When he returns to Venus, what report is displayed by the little one as he tells his mother about his visit to Earth? What does the little one reveal to her about the people he saw there?

The little one seems excited about his visit to Earth.

He reveals that Earthlings "wear garments over skin, and they walk with two legs."

9. What does the Me-cree one explain to his wife about why he was not frightened during his visit to Earth?

The Me-cree one explains that he and the others from Koon remained in the spaceship and were protected from Earthlings by their disguise.

10. What is ironic about the last line of the story?

The last line of the story is ironic because the little one felt free despite the fact that he was behind bars, while he viewed the Earthlings as the ones who were caged in a box.

11. Using information from the story, draw an inference as to why the Professor brings the creatures to Earth each year.

Since the professor charges so little money for Earthlings to see the creatures each year, it may be inferred that he uses the fee to educate himself about extraterrestrial beings.

12. The writer, C.S. Lewis, once wrote that, "What you see and what you hear depends a great deal on where you are standing." How does this quote relate to the story's theme?

While the humans looked at the creatures from Koon as strange beings due to their features and actions, the creatures viewed humans in the same manner. Additionally, while the Earthlings spent money to see the zoo, the creatures spent money to travel to Earth to see the people looking at them. Therefore, both saw the other as the subject of special attraction.
