

The standard allows for fragmentation of the MAC data units into smaller frames. Fragmentation is favorable in case the wireless channel is not reliable enough to transmit longer frames. Only frames with a length greater than a fragmentation threshold will be fragmented. Each fragment will be sent independently and will be separately acknowledged. During a contention period, all fragments of a single frame will be sent as burst with a single invocation of the DCF medium access procedure. In case of PCF and during a contention free period, fragments are sent individually following the rules of the point coordinator (PC).

Question / Answer:

1) Based on the definition of the statistic Load, explain why with PCF enabled the load is lower than if DCF is used without PCF.

Load represents the total load (in bits/sec) submitted to wireless LAN layers by all other higher layers in all WLAN nodes of the network. This statistic does not include the bits of the higher layer packets that are dropped by WLAN MACs upon arrival and not considered for transmission due to, for example, insufficient space left in the higher layer packet buffer of the MAC. Simply put, fewer bits are sent to the network because with PCF enabled, the network is polling the system for open stations to initiate data transmission.

2) Analyze the graphs that compare the Delay and Throughput of the four scenarios. What are the effect of utilizing PCF and fragmentation on these two statistics?

The effects of utilizing PCF and fragmentation on the end to end delay are that without PCF or fragmentation of data, the delay is increased significantly. While if only fragmentation is enabled, the delay is even greater.

As PCF and fragmentation are enabled, throughput increases, but if fragmentation of data is enabled alone, functionality of the network drops substantially.
