Elke U Weber Richard Zeckhauser The Psychology of Risk Victor Ricciardi, 2013 Since the mid 1970s hundreds of academic studies have been conducted in risk perception oriented research within the social sciences e.g. nonfinancial areas across various branches of learning. The academic foundation pertaining to the "psychological aspects" of risk perception studies in behavioral finance, accounting and economics developed from the earlier works on risky behaviors and hazardous activities. This research on risky and hazardous situations was based on studies performed at Decision Research, an organization founded in 1976 by Paul Slovic, on risk perception, documenting specific behavioral risk characteristics from psychology that can be applied within a financial and investment decision making context. A notable theme within the risk perception literature is how an investor processes information and the various behavioral finance theories and issues that might influence a person's perception of risk within the judgment process. The different behavioral finance theories and concepts that influence an individual's perception of risk for different types of financial services and investment products are heuristics, overconfidence, prospect theory, loss aversion, representativeness, framing, anchoring, familiarity bias, perceived control, expert knowledge, affect, feelings and worry. The Psychology of Strategic Terrorism Ben Sheppard, 2009 This new volume explores terrorism and strategic terror, examining how the public responds to terrorist attacks and what authorities can do in such situations. The book uses a unique interdisciplinary approach which combines the behavioural sciences and international relations in order to further the understanding of the terror generated by strategic terror. The work examines five contemporary case studies of the psychological and behavioural effects of strategic terror from either terrorist attacks or aerial bombardment. It also looks at how risk communication and public health strategies can amplify or reduce psychological and behavioural responses and considers whether behavioural effects translate into political effects and what governments can do to relieve this. Ultimately, the study argues that the public is not prone to panic but can change their behaviours to reduce their perceived risk of being exposed to a terrorist attack. This book will be of much interest to students of terrorism studies, homeland security, social psychology and politics in general. The Psychology of Travel Andrew Stevenson, 2023-05-02 Why do we travel?
