

Of Mice and Men Lit 2001

Hardships

Crooks - black; crippled; isolated; mistreated; friendless; educated; suspicious; lonely; insecure. He pulls away from people for fear of how they will treat him; he's perfected horseshoes; he retreats into his shell 'perfect dignity' when threatened

Candy - disabled; useless; friendless; can be 'canned' too easily; old dog only companion. Very susceptible to G+L's dream as offering only hope of security. L's death took that away.

Curley's wife - hopes and dreams shattered now she's living with her mistake. Curley treats her as an object; forbids her contact; she's lonely; suspicious and suspected; desperate for affection.

Her response is to flirt - to annoy Curley, get a response from him and also to reassure herself of her looks; give her hope.

Relationships

G+L - mutual need and companionship. Not a relationship of equals but both have qualities the other lacks; based on length of time they've been together, loyalty and trust. In the end G killing L is done out of kindness and compassion; he's learned from Candy's guilt over his dog 'I shoulda done it myself'; only a true friend could do this act. In fact G has let him down because he picked up on the threat of the place and begged G to leave, but they don't and L ends up dead, so he had a responsibility to him.

Candy and the dog - 'I had him since a pup' and despite being quite useless now 'he used to be the best sheep herder'. Candy feels the comparison between them too clearly and though he lets Carlson kill the dog he wonders about his own future. Realises he should have done the deed, should have treated his friend with the respect he deserved.

Curley and his wife - if Curley had talked to her, treated her as an equal and not as an object she would not have needed to seek companionship and may not have died. Curley was afraid of losing her so boxed her in. She doesn't take well to restrictions!

Fears

Lennie - losing George; knows he's dependent on him; losing the hope of tending the rabbits - this keeps him behaving as much as possible; able to manipulate G into feeling guilty about the way he sometimes treats him; afraid to tell G about the puppy and C's wife - runs away. G made him realise this place was threatening, he suggested they leave, G said no and L died.

George - of being alone; L only link with past; looks after L out of kindness and compassion; kills him out of same.

Curley - of losing his wife; doesn't understand women so treats her like an object; forbids her contact with others; causes her loneliness and as a result her death; hides his own vulnerability with aggression; picks on weaker men.

Trapped

Crooks is trapped by his colour and disability; he's been here so long to go elsewhere is an impossibility. He's badly enough treated here but at least it's familiar. He has some advantages over the other workers but they are disadvantages too. We feel sympathy for him because of our position in history and knowing that this kind of treatment of others is wrong.

Curley's wife is trapped in her hasty marriage; though we may feel sympathy for her at the way she is neglected by Curley, the way she lashes out at Crooks loses our sympathy and we probably feel she has got what she deserves.

George is trapped in Lennie's need for him. He is too moral to just leave him but can only see hopelessness. He invented the dream stake as a way of giving himself and Lennie hope; of course it seemed impossible (a pipe dream) but Candy's offer makes it suddenly a possibility. Lennie's death crushes it forever.

Loneliness drove these characters together but it also twisted their judgment. Three of them grow older and wiser or perhaps more bitter.
