Peritoneal dialysis

The diagram illustrates the peritoneal dialysis process. A patient's abdomen is shown with a catheter inserted into the peritoneal cavity. The catheter is connected to a dialyzer, which is then connected to a drainage bag. The dialyzer is labeled with 'Peritoneal cavity', 'Dialyzer', and 'Peritoneum'. The drainage bag is labeled 'Drainage bag'. The dialyzer is also labeled with 'Dialysis solution' and 'Ultrafiltrate'. The diagram shows the flow of dialysis solution from the dialyzer into the peritoneal cavity and the flow of ultrafiltrate from the peritoneal cavity into the drainage bag.

During peritoneal dialysis (PD), a catheter is placed into the peritoneal cavity to infuse dialysis (dialysis fluid). The tubing is then clamped to allow the fluid to dwell for a specified period. After this dwell time, the catheter is unclamped and the fluid effluent drains out via gravity.

Cloudy effluent (effluent), backache, and low glucose level are signs of peritonitis, an infection of the peritoneal cavity and a major concern with PD. Cloudy fluid can indicate bacterial peritonitis or that the fluid may be contaminated. Brown effluent can indicate blood contamination.
