And the Winner Is . . .

As a writer, you need to know how to use commas to let readers know where to pause when reading a sentence. Use a comma:

- after each item in a series of three or more, except after the last item.
After school, read, and revised his story.
- to set off the name of the person you are addressing directly.
Well, your dad, it was more like, jump!

- after introductory words like yes, no, and well.
Yes, I have some time right now.
- to set off an appositive from the rest of the sentence.
The Fun to Paper Club, a writing organization, sponsored a contest.

- before a conjunction that joins two sentences.
Max entered his story, but he never thought he'd win.
- after a dependent clause that begins a sentence.
When the letter came, Max was too nervous to open it.

- to set off words that interrupt the basic idea of a sentence.
Max's sister, therefore, opened it for him.
- to separate geographical names and dates.
Max won a trip to Orlando, Florida. They left Monday, June 25, 2003.

Write a sentence to answer each question. Include commas where they are needed.

- 1 On what day and date will you celebrate your next birthday?

- 2 If you could choose to live in any city or town in any state, where would it be?

- 3 How would you complete the following sentence?
Whenever I _____
- 4 Imagine that you have been asked to introduce the President of the United States at a town hall meeting. How would you begin your introduction using direct address?
