Saving Migrant Birds John Faaborg, 2014-02-19 Rigorous and well defended Faaborg makes many fresh and in some cases provocative points regarding management guidelines for migrant birds Kenneth Able Great Plains Research In the 1980s numerous scientific surveys documented both declining bird populations especially among Neotropical songbirds that winter in the tropics and the loss of tropical rain forest habitat Drawing the seemingly obvious conclusion scientists and environmental activists linked songbird declines to loss of tropical habitats and alerted the world to an impending ecological catastrophe Their warnings led to the establishment of the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Program also known as Partners in Flight the self proclaimed largest conservation effort in history Looking back over more than a decade of efforts to save migrant birds John Faaborg offers the first serious evaluation of the state of songbird populations today the effectiveness of conservation programs such as Partners in Flight and the reliability and completeness of scientific research on migrant birds Taking neither an alarmist nor a complacent approach he shows that many factors besides habitat loss affect bird populations and that Neotropical migrants as a group are not declining dramatically though some species adapt to habitat alteration more successfully than others Faaborg's state of the art survey thus clarifies the kinds of information we will need and the conservation efforts we should undertake to ensure the long term survival of Neotropical migrant birds Presents a carefully and closely reasoned argument about the magnitude of the conservation problems facing migrant birds how we can reduce these problems and how current conservation efforts have enormous value even if there is no immediate crisis Scott K Robinson Professor and Head Department of Animal Biology University of Illinois Saving Migrant Birds John Faaborg, 2002-12-01 In the 1980s numerous scientific surveys documented both declining bird populations especially among Neotropical songbirds that winter in the tropics and the loss of tropical rain forest habitat Drawing the seemingly obvious conclusion scientists and environmental activists linked songbird declines to loss of tropical habitats and alerted the world to an impending ecological catastrophe Their warnings led to the establishment of the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Program also known as Partners in Flight the self proclaimed largest conservation effort in history Looking back over more than a decade of efforts to save migrant birds John Faaborg offers the first serious evaluation of the state of songbird populations today the effectiveness of conservation programs such as Partners in Flight and the reliability and completeness of scientific research on migrant birds Taking neither an alarmist nor a complacent approach he shows that many factors besides habitat loss affect bird populations and that Neotropical migrants as a group are not declining dramatically though some species adapt to habitat alteration more successfully than others Faaborg's state of the art survey thus clarifies the kinds of information we will need and the conservation efforts we should undertake to ensure the long term survival of Neotropical migrant birds The Florida Field Naturalist ,2002 The Condor ,2003 The Prairie Naturalist ,2003 Birding ,2002 Birds in Trouble Lynn E. Barber, 2016-04-01 As oil was washing up on the shores of Louisiana covering shorebirds and their nests and eggs after the Deepwater Horizon disaster Lynn Barber decided to write this book to heighten awareness not only of the plight of bird species that are declining in numbers every year but also of the ways in which the birds we see every day may also face the same fate First explaining the idea of birds in trouble and what that means in terms of population conservation status and national and international designations the book then turns to the habitats that are important to birds how they are affected by changes in these habitats and what ordinary people can do to help counter those negative effects Barber then profiles forty two species that are in trouble in the United States discussing the likely reasons why and what if anything we can do to improve their situations Illustrated throughout with the author s signature bird art the book closes with a reminder about what we can do to ensure that the birds we see every day in our yards parks and communities will remain with us The Zoological Record ,2003-12 Library Journal ,2002

Bibliography of Agriculture ,1996 Bibliography of Agriculture with Subject Index ,1996 The Avian Migrant John H. Rappole,2013-06-11 The purpose of migration regardless of the distance involved is to exploit two or more environments suitable for survival or reproduction over time usually on a seasonal basis Yet individual organisms can practice the phenomenon differently and birds deploy unique patterns of movement over particular segments of time Incorporating the latest research on bird migration this concise critical assessment offers contemporary readers a firm grasp of what defines an avian migrant how the organism came to be what is known about its behavior and how we can resolve its enduring mysteries John H Rappole s sophisticated survey of field data clarifies key ecological biological physiological navigational and evolutionary concerns He begins with the very first migrants who traded a home environment of greater stability for one of greater seasonality and uses the structure of the annual cycle to examine the difference between migratory birds and their resident counterparts. He ultimately connects these differences to evolutionary milestones that have shaped a migrant lifestyle through natural selection. Rather than catalogue and describe various aspects of bird migration, Rappole considers how the avian migrant fits within a larger ecological frame, enabling a richer understanding of the phenomenon and its critical role in sustaining a hospitable and productive environment. Rappole concludes with a focus on population biology and conservation across time periods, considering the link between bird migration and the spread of disease among birds and humans, and the effects of global warming on migrant breeding ranges, reaction norms, and macroecology.

A Blueprint for the Future of Migratory Birds: Migratory Bird Program Strategic Plan 2004-2014 U. S. Department of the Interior, Fish and Wildlife Service, 2012-08-23

The seasonal ebb and flow of migratory birds is one of the most complex and compelling dramas in the natural world. Driven by a genetic memory, millions of years in the making, these animals embark twice each year on long distance journeys between their breeding areas and wintering grounds. Their travels traverse states, landscapes, and oceans throughout the hemispheres, linking the countries, peoples, and ecosystems they visit. The conservation and management of animals capable of such impressive mobility requires strong federal leadership to foster effective partnerships among the many nations, states, provinces, tribes, and organizations that are woven together by the flight paths of these remarkable species. The U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service is the principal federal agency charged with protecting and enhancing the populations and habitats of more than 800 species of migratory birds that spend all or part of their lives in the United States. The Service is committed to undertaking an unprecedented level of cooperation and coordination to protect and conserve these international treasures. The Migratory Bird Program of the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service enjoys a rich and successful tradition. It has been instrumental on its own and with partners in delivering bird conservation throughout the hemisphere for several decades. It is a critical hub through which much is accomplished. This strategic plan outlines the future direction of the Migratory Bird Program and how it will continue to contribute to bird conservation in North America and around the world. Like a blueprint, it lays out the goals and design for a promising future for migratory birds. This blueprint reflects the collective wisdom of many people and groups that care deeply about birds and their habitats. Birds are indicators of the health and quality of our environment and are enjoyed by a large proportion of our citizens. It is critically important for us to better understand the dynamics of those bird populations and habitats that are in trouble and then take actions to intervene strategically and effectively whenever we can. And it is also important to support actions to keep common birds common. Clearly, the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service alone cannot achieve the conservation of migratory birds; it will take the collective and coordinated efforts of thousands of partner organizations and citizens to do this. Birds are everywhere, and we all have a responsibility to act on their behalf. As directed by international treaties and domestic legislation, the United States government and its people have called upon the Service to serve as a leader, a catalyst, and a facilitator of local regional national and international partnerships to protect restore and manage all native migratory birds for future generations This plan provides the structure and framework to guide the Service in this all important effort We will use this strategic plan as a guidepost for future funding and policy decisions however this plan is both dynamic and evolutionary We will revise it periodically with input from our partners to reflect lessons learned from both our successes and our failures And we will hold ourselves accountable for results which will add up to a better future for migratory birds and their habitats throughout the hemisphere and beyond As you read this plan please consider how you can contribute to the Vision Priorities Goals and Strategies of the blueprint It will take all of us to make it happen And the beneficiaries will be future generations of citizens who will continue to hear birds singing in the morning who will delight in seeing a bird in their backyard or along a nature trail or who will enjoy connecting with nature through a hunting experience
