Watchdog A Credit Crunch Fairytale:

Watchdog Robert Anderson, 2014-11-10 Matthew Verreaux is a frazzled associate in the London office of an international law firm. A nightmarish deal has left him disillusioned, cynical and embittered. The never-ending hours of dedication to a job that offers him so little professional fulfillment drives him out of the office building and right over the edge into a chasm of unemployment during what quickly becomes the 2008 collapse of the world economy. With a romantic break-up following quickly on the heels of the loss of his career, Matthew is forced to start over and he soon finds out just how hard that can be in a city in the throes of the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. He is forced to take a boring pedestrian job with the Standards Supervision Team at cable television watchdog Ofcom, but what at first seems like a worse alternative to an already terrible professional life ends up presenting unexpected circumstances that offer new purpose, romance, friendship and the self-reinvention he'd been hoping for. Through the dark clouds of financial disaster, fear and desperation, Watchdog shines with satirical humor, love and truth in the way only a credit crunch fairytale could. The Guardian Index, 1987
