

SAUNDERS NCLEX REVIEW OB QUESTIONS WITH COMPLETE ANSWERS

The nurse is collecting data from a pregnant client when the client asks the nurse about the purpose of the fallopian tubes. Which is the accurate response the nurse should make?

- A. The organ of copulation
- B. Where the fetus develops
- C. Where fertilization occurs
- D. The organ that secretes estrogen and progesterone - Answer-C

(Each fallopian tube is a hollow muscular tube that transports a mature oocyte for final maturation and fertilization)

The nursing instructor asks a nursing student to list the functions of amniotic fluid. The student needs further teaching if which responses are made? (Select all that apply)

- A. Allows for fetal movement
- B. Is a measure of kidney function
- C. Surrounds, cushions, and protects the fetus
- D. Maintains the body temperature of the fetus
- E. Prevents large particles such as bacteria from passing to the fetus
- F. Provides an exchange of nutrients and waste products between the mother and the fetus - Answer-EF

(The amniotic fluid surrounds, cushions, and protects the fetus. The placenta, not the amniotic fluid, prevents large particles such as bacteria from passing to the fetus, and the placenta provides an exchange of nutrients and waste products between the mother and the fetus. Amniotic fluid allows the fetus to move freely, it maintains the body temperature of the fetus, and it helps to measure kidney function because the amount of fluid is based on the amount of urination from the fetus.)

The nurse working in a prenatal clinic reviews a client's chart and notes that the primary health care provider documents that the client has a gynecoid pelvis. The nurse plans care understanding that which findings are characteristic of this type of pelvis? (Select all that apply)

- A. Round shape
- B. Shallow depth
- C. Narrow pubic arch
- D. Diagonal conjugate measures 12.5cm to 13cm
- E. Blunt, somewhat widely separated ischial spines - Answer-ADE

(A gynecoid pelvis is a normal female pelvis, and it is the most favorable for successful labor and birth. Characteristics of a gynecoid pelvis include round shape, blunted ischial spines that are widely separated, a diagonal conjugate of at least 12.5 cm to 13 cm, a wide pelvic arch, and an adequate depth.)
