

Student Exploration: Electromagnetic Induction

Prior Knowledge Question (Do this BEFORE using the Gizmo.)

A metal spoon can easily attract iron objects, such as paper clips. What happens when you hold the handle of a spoon in your hand and rub it against a magnet? What happens when you rub it against a piece of wood? What happens when you rub it against a piece of plastic?

Is a conductor made of wood attracted to a magnet? Why?

Classroom Discussion

Usually when power companies use conductors, you can see a battery or switch. Energy doesn't go directly to a house. But is it possible to generate a current without a battery? How can this be done? Use the Electromagnetic Induction Gizmo.

In the Gizmo, you can drag the magnet around or move the coil. Try to make the magnet go into the coil. How much current does this create? Experiment with the Gizmo to determine which different ways you can create a current and how much current is produced. Write down your findings below.

By moving the magnet, you can create a current. Try moving quickly and slowly. Notice how the current changes. Does moving the magnet faster create more current?

Activity A:
Electromagnetic
Induction

Initial Setup

- Turn on Show electric field in Gizmo.
- Click Reset to move the magnet over and turn the speed to 10 units.

Background: When electric current flows through a wire, it produces a magnetic field near the wire. Similarly, moving a magnet back and forth creates the process of electromagnetic induction.

Question: What are magnetic induction effects? Write.
