Find a printable version of larger cards at <https://open.elsevier.com>

Metrics illuminate the impact of your research outputs. Promotion and tenure committees, funders, advisors, research team leaders and potential collaborators are all interested in information about impact. But where to start? Your library can advise you on metrics — found on Elsevier products or via other sources — that can help you too.

DOCUMENT | AUTHOR | JOURNAL

"Document" is the definitions refers to primary document types such as journal articles, books and conference papers. See Scopus Content Coverage Guide (page 4) for a full list of document types <https://open.elsevier.com>

Indicates that the Elsevier Metrics group agreed to include in a standardized matrix, which is data source and system agnostic. <https://open.elsevier.com>

of citations received since publication

A simple measure of attention for a particular article, journal or researcher. As with all citation-based measures, it is important to be aware of citation practices. The paper "Collective Strategies for Increasing Citation Frequency" lists 22 different ways to increase citations.

of items published by an individual or group of individuals

A researcher using Document Count should also provide a list of document types and titles. If authors use an ORCID ID — a persistent scholarly identifier — they can draw on numerous sources for document count including Scopus, ResearcherID, Crossref and PubMed. Register for an ORCID ID at <http://orcid.org>

FIELD-WEIGHTED CITATION IMPACT (FWCI)

of citations received by a document weighted by # of citations by similar documents

Similar documents are ones in the same discipline, of the same type (article, letter, review) and of the same age. An FWCI of 1 means that the output performs just as expected against the global average. More than 1 means that the output is more cited than expected according to the global average. For example, a 1.41 means 41% more cited than expected.

h-INDEX

of articles in the collection (N) that have received at least (N) citations over the whole period

For example, an h-index of 8 means that 8 of the collection's articles have each received at least 8 citations. h-index is not derived by a single highly cited paper, nor by a large number of poorly cited documents. The h-index measure can be applied to any collection of citable documents. Related h-type indices emphasize other factors, such as momentum or rising output over citation history.

achieved in a year by documents published in previous 3 years

This comprehensive, current and open metric for journal citation impact (introduced in December 2015) is available on a free layer of Scopus.com. It includes a yearly release and monthly Citescore Tracker updates. Find Citescore metrics for journals, conference proceedings, book series and books/journals at <https://www.elsevier.com>

SCIMAGO JOURNAL RANK (SJR)

average # of weighted citations received in a year

Citations are weighted — worth more or less — depending on the source they come from. The subject field, quality and reputation of the journal have a direct effect on the value of a citation. Can be applied to journals, book series and conference proceedings. Calculated by SCImago. <http://www.scimagojr.com> (download on Scopus data)

SOURCE NORMALIZED IMPACT PER PAPER (SNIP)

journal's citation count per paper attention potential in its subject field

The impact of a single citation will have a higher value in subject areas where citations are less likely, and vice versa. SNIP also reflects the reliability of the source. Smaller journals tend to have under-represented impact than larger journals.

Calculated by CNIS. <http://www.elsevier.com> (download on Scopus data)

JOURNAL IMPACT FACTOR

citations in a year by documents published in previous 3 years

Based on Web of Science data, this metric is updated once a year and traditionally released in June following the year of coverage as part of the Journal Citation Reports®. It also includes a five-year impact factor.

PERCENTILE BENCHMARK (ARTICLES)

average rank of same age, subject area or document type over an 18-month window

The higher the percentile benchmark, the better. This is available in Scopus for citations, and also for monthly membership and tweets. Particularly useful for authors as a way to contextualize citation counts for journal articles as an indicator of academic impact.

OUTPUTS IN TOP PERCENTILES

ranked within top 10% Outputs in Top Percentiles can be field specific. It indicates those study articles are in the top 10%, 25%, 50% or 75% of the most cited documents. Quick way to benchmark groups of researchers.

SCHOLARLY ACTIVITY ONLINE

of items where added an article into their personal scholarly collaboration network

The website HowCanIShareIt? links to publisher sharing policies, outlining principles for article sharing on scholarly collaboration networks, and places to share that embrace these principles, including Mendeley, ResearchGate, ORCID and others. <http://www.elsevier.com>

SCHOLARLY COMMENTARY ONLINE

of mentions in scientific blogs and/or academic websites

Investigating beyond the count to actual mentions by scholars could improve possible future research collaboration or opportunities to add to the growing number of science journals. These mentions can be found in the Scopus Article Metrics module and within free and subscription database tools and services.

SOCIAL ACTIVITY ONLINE

of mentions on online-blogging sites

Online blogging sites may include Twitter, Facebook, Google+ and others. Monitoring on this attention is becoming increasingly important in academia. Can be a way to complement traditional citation-based metrics, which may take years to accumulate. They may also open the gateway.

MEDIA MENTIONS

of mentions in news or popular media

Media mentions are valued indicators of social impact as they often highlight the potential impact of the research on society. Scopus itself includes an institution's press clipping service as an alternative provider. Mendeley, Scopus (Article Metrics module), Pure and Scopus also report on these metrics.
