

Lesson 13

Comparing Text Structures, Part 2: Cause–Effect, Compare–Contrast

Learning Target

Compare and contrast texts with different text structures.

- Read How is a house different from a skyscraper? They each have a different structure and purpose. Authors use different text structures for specific purposes, too.
- The purpose of a cause–effect text structure is to tell about events and explain why they happen. Words and phrases like cause, effect, because, and as a result are sometimes used in a cause–effect structure.
 - The purpose of a compare–contrast text structure is to describe how two or more things are similar and different. A compare–contrast text structure will frequently use words like both, unlike, similarly, and in contrast.

Comparing texts can help you see their structures and purposes.

Read the passages below. Look for evidence of the structure and the purpose of each one.

Passage 1: Octopuses and squid have ink sacs. When threatened, they defend themselves by shooting a thick cloud of dark ink into the water. Because the ink is thick and dark, it hides octopuses and squid from their attackers. As a result, octopuses and squid have time to escape.

Passage 2: Octopuses and squid live in salt water. Both have blue blood, hard beaks, and eight arms lined with suckers. Octopuses live in dens on the sea floor where they hunt for clams, lobsters, and crabs. In contrast, squid live in the open ocean and eat fish and shrimp.
