

CANTILEVER STAIRS:

- They are also called spine wall stairs.
- They consist of a central vertical wall from which the flights and half space landings are cantilevered.

- The wall provides a degree of fire resistance between the flights and is therefore used mainly for the escape stairs.
- Since both flights and landings are cantilevered the reinforcement is placed in the top of the flight slab and in the upper surface of the landing to counteract the induced negative moment.
- The plan arrangement can be a single straight flight or two flights with half space landings.
