Writing Academic Essays

Originally, the word essay (from the French essayer, 'to try') has come to mean a piece of writing, also specific subject, but it is worth remembering that not all essays are about facts, the sciences and quantitative research. Some essays are about 'trying out' ideas and arguments to see if they fit the required criteria (e.g. a research paper).

In academic writing, an essay usually involves responding to a question or topic. The writer looks at the issue from the inside through his or her own experience. This can be quite complex and so essays are generally longer than most. There are a number of approaches that can be taken, and these are often taught in a specific way. In a research paper, it is important that you develop the required skills.

The purpose of writing an academic essay is to provide a written record of your thinking.

- 1. Research, evidence
- 2. Select your topic (or topic) and select your material
- 3. Select your topic (or topic) and select your material

Types of Essay

There are two main types of essay: the research essay and the reflective essay. The following are the most common:

The reflective essay usually describes the experience in a personal way. The reflective essay usually describes a 'fact' or event of the writer's experience.

The research essay defines a problem and looks to solve, compare and contrast different arguments, and provide an answer. It is a piece of writing that is often longer than most, and it is often longer than most.
