"That isn't fair," Marta screeches, her shrill voice rising another octave. "Lucia's idea is childish and awful!"

I leap to defend myself but quickly choke back my words. Our parents' faces are bleak.

We both storm into our bedroom and resume our positions; she's on her bed, and I'm across the room on mine. We lock eyes for a few moments before she sighs and slumps against the wall. "So why do you want to do this ocean thing?" she asks in a monotone voice, acting like she doesn't care.

"Remember our vacation last year?" I cross my arms and glare at her. "It was so much fun, and we didn't fight all week, not even when it rained all day and we stayed in the hotel room. It would be nice to have a reminder of that." I look up, surprised to see the tension draining from her face.

"I didn't know that it meant so much to you," she murmurs, sounding almost apologetic. She thinks for a moment, then explains. "This is our only chance, Lucia. We get to decorate once, and you might not want to see starfish every day for the next five years. If we choose a simpler design, we can enjoy it longer."

I hadn't considered that before. "The walls don't have to be blue," I say quietly, uncrossing my arms. "I like other colors, too."

"A darker blue could be nice, maybe with white trim?" Marta gives me a shy smile. She mentions that Mom took a lot of photos during that trip, most of them of the ocean. "Maybe we could use those for artwork instead of my old posters," she offers.

I beam at her. "I would like that a lot."

Marta scurries onto my bed and together we brainstorm ideas for our shared living space. I have a sinking suspicion that this was Mom and Dad's plan all along, but Marta and I are having such a good time that I'll let it slide... this time.

Sharing a bedroom isn't getting off to a good start, especially when we can't agree on how to decorate it.
