The broadest subject of the previous section involves all technical mathematics and thinking required for just what we commonly call engineering, and all mathematics required for research and invention. The present section is distinguished by a detailed description of the activities of each phase, a description of each subject in its own right, and a description of the relation of each subject to the others. It is a description of the whole, rather than of the parts, and is not intended to be a substitute for the other parts.
