

Bio A. Lab 1. Vitruvian Man Meets the Scientific Method Writing and Testing Appropriate Hypotheses

Leonardo da Vinci's drawing Vitruvian Man shows how the proportions of the human body fit perfectly into a circle or a square. This diagram by Leonardo da Vinci is an illustration of Vitruvius' theory. According to Vitruvius' theory the distance from fingertip to fingertip (arm span) should be equal to the distance from head to heel (height). In this activity you will explore the legitimacy of Vitruvius' theory by developing a hypothesis regarding Vitruvian Man.

A hypothesis is a possible explanation for a set of observations or an answer to a scientific question. A hypothesis is useful only if it can be tested. Testable hypotheses are generally written in a formalized format using an if-then statement. For example;

- If my car does not start because the battery is dead, then when I replace the old battery with a new one, it will start.
- If increasing physical activity causes a person to burn calories and lose weight, then I should lose weight when I run 2 miles a day.

Formalized hypotheses contain both a dependent and an independent variable. The independent variable is the one that you change and the dependent variable is the one you observe and measure to collect data. Consider a hypothesis that says "If the temperature is decreased, then the lizard will take longer to travel from point A to point B". In this example, temperature is the independent variable because the experimenter controls it and time is the dependent variable because the time required for movement is being measured. Using the if-then format forces the scientist to think about what results are expected.

PURPOSE

In Part I you will develop and test a hypothesis regarding Vitruvius' theory on human proportions. In Part II, you will devise and test a hypothesis concerning the relationship between foot and forearm lengths. Only Part II needs to be in your lab book.
