Silent moment to look

Encourage students to look in all areas and build their endurance for observation time.

What's going on in this picture?

This is when students will infer. Accept all answers and do not judge with either praise or criticism in your words or tone of voice.

Summarize

Paraphrase their inference. Change the wording but not the meaning of what is said. Demonstrate proper sentence structure and vocabulary with language development.

What do you see that makes you say that?

Students citing evidence for their inference is a crucial step. Students are learning to make detailed observations, sorting out and applying what they know. Do not praise or criticize. Articulating thoughts leads to growth even when they make mistakes. Maintain a safe climate for risk taking.

What more can we find?

Keep students searching for more observations. Often students are used to finding "the right answer" and being "done"; this question teaches that inquiry and wonder never end.

Thank students for their participation.

Conclude the lesson by telling students what you particularly enjoyed. Encourage them to think of viewing art as an ongoing, open-ended process. Do not summarize what was stated as that has happened throughout the lesson.

Remember the VTS process is not fully internalized by students until they have experienced it 10-12 times.
