DOOR AND REAR POWER LOCK CIRCUIT

These terminals are in the door lock extension harness. The terminal connects to the door lock door body harness near the door panel. The door lock extension harness is routed along the left rear door lock body (Figure 15).

In a panel van, the wiring to the side door and rear door appears at the top of the door lock frame. The wiring to the side door branches off at the top of the door lock frame, and routes across the rear door to power the right rear door lock body, where it is routed to the door frame contact assembly. The door frame contact assembly aligns with the door frame assembly so that electrical contact is made when the door is closed. In this way, electricity is conducted to the side door power lock motor. The wiring to the rear door branches off at the top of the door lock frame, routes along the left rear rail to the rear door frame, across the rear door header to the right rear door frame, down the finger frame to a finger contact on the right rear door, and connects to the door lock motor.

In a passenger van, the wiring to the side door and rear door appears about one foot above the top of the door lock frame. The wiring to the side door branches off about one foot from the rear and runs up the door lock frame, and routes across the rail frame and down the right rear door lock frame where it connects to the door frame contact assembly. The door frame contact assembly aligns with the door frame assembly so that electrical contact is made when the door is closed. In this way, electricity is conducted to the side door power lock motor. The wiring to the rear door branches off at the top of the door lock frame, routes along the left rear rail to the rear door frame, across the rear door header to the right rear door frame, down the finger frame to a finger contact on the right rear door, and connects to the door lock motor.

POWER WINDOW SYSTEM

This harness starts at the rear door and runs to the left and right along the instrument panel. The harness then branches into the left and right rear door (Figure 17).

Each power window is moved by a single motor. The direction the motor turns depends on the polarity of the supply voltage. The motor switches control the supply voltage polarity.

Before connecting at the power window or located at the driver's door. Each passenger's door switch controls only the window at that passenger's position.

The motor has a self-resetting circuit breaker in it. The circuit breaker allows the motor to be used without damage. There are no fuses and no relays.

INTERIOR LIGHTING SYSTEM

The circuit starts at the fuse block and routes to an interior harness connector. The connector connects to wiring that goes to the left front overhead storage compartment under the left front door, all compartments along the left front door lock frame, the lamp bracket along the left front door lock frame, the lamp bracket along the right front door lock frame, and the lamp bracket along the right rear door lock frame. The wiring then goes to the rear lamp and connects to the
