Reed, 2015-07-19 Excerpt from North American Birds Eggs Illustrating the Eggs of Nearly Every Species of North American Birds The greatest interest in the study of birds centers in their home life Soon after their arrival from their winter quarters all birds take upon themselves the duties of reproduction the first step of which is the securing of a satisfactory location some species such as Auklets Petrels Burrowing Owls Kingfishers Bank Swallows etc nest at the end of burrows or holes in the ground a great many nest upon the ground some laying their eggs upon the bare sand leaves or rock while others build nests either bulky or slight as suits their respective tastes hundreds construct their homes among the branches of trees or bushes some close to the ground others among the highest branches and still others swaying from the ends of the outermost limbs other species lay their eggs at the bottom of holes in trees either in natural cavities or in holes dug by their own efforts the most noticeable in the latter class being the Woodpeckers which often chisel their way into limbs of living trees The study of nests alone is most interesting the rude and slight platforms of the Herons Cuckoos Grosbeaks etc the rough but substantial structures of the Robin and the exquisite architectural creations of the Hummingbirds Flycatchers Orioles Bush tits etc Surely the work of some of these little feathered creatures these homes without hands show as great a degree of skill and artistic temperament as is seen in the human race The eggs of the different species vary through all the tints from white to blue green and brown some unmarked others handsomely specked spotted blotched or wreathed with different shades of brown lilac and lavender and their sizes vary from that of the diminutive Hummingbird to the Albatross Swan and California Vulture as the largest North American eggs and the Ostrich of Africa whose egg will contain several quarts The nesting season ranges from January with some of the Owls to August in the case of the American Goldfinch but by far the majority of species lay their eggs during May or June It is at this period during their lives that birds are at their best their plumage is the brightest their voices are the sweetest and their actions the most brilliant The purpose of this volume is to furnish a reference and guide to all bird students who may desire to study the home life of our feathered creatures by a description of how when and where they build their nests and the appearance of their eggs About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in

American Birds I venture its publication and await the results The species of eggs described belong strictly to the North American fauna These descriptions are taken chiefly from my private collection consisting upwards of four hundred species of North American Birds Eggs mostly in original sets together with the skins of the birds It is intended that through the aid of this Check List the collector may be enabled to identify his specimens while in the field He will learn from this List what a great similarity there is in the eggs of the different species and in fact whole families and how careful he must be to determine correctly In the latter part of the present work there will be found concise directions for collecting Birds Eggs and Nests to which I specially call the attention of all young collectors Under the head of Notes I give additional information regarding the nesting habits of many of the species I am fully aware that the present List is not entirely complete and therefore earnestly solicit additions corrections and notes of every character relating to the subject from Ornithologists and Oologists About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
