

4. "Sensation and Perception"

I. Chapter Outline. For each chapter, begin by taking notes on the chapter's content, by writing a comprehensive and annotated outline. The purpose of this task is to habituate yourself to taking notes on what you read. And the more and better and effortfully you "frontload" notes here, the less you will need to re-read the text when exams roll around. A "comprehensive and annotated" outline is not just a listing of the chapter's headings and subsections, but rather a system of note-taking that is your own balance of efficiency and completeness. The style does not matter (Cornell, bullets, full sentences...); efficient and comprehensive does.

II. Vocabulary. Define the following words completely and comprehensively.

sensation
perception
bottom-up processing
top-down processing
sensory receptors
absolute threshold
noise
difference threshold Weber's law subliminal perception
signal detection theory
attention
selective attention

middle ear
inner ear
place theory
frequency theory

auditory nerve

III. Section Review Questions. Following each major section of each chapter you will find 3 review questions that ask you to both summarize and think critically about or analyze the content of the chapter. Answer each of these in a comprehensive and critically thoughtful paragraph (or more, as needed) of 10-15 sentences.
