

Service Learning Reflection Toolkit¹

Reflection is a crucial part of community service, which allows volunteers to look back on, think critically about, and learn from their service experience. Reflection may include acknowledging and/or sharing of reactions, feelings, observations, and ideas about anything regarding the activity. Reflection can happen through writing, speaking, listening, reading, drawing, acting, and any other way you can imagine. Reflection is the key component of service learning. It is what distinguishes service learning from volunteering and community service.²

Reflection provides faculty the means to assess the experiential learning that occurs when students participate in service activities outside of the classroom. Reflection also allows students to synthesize the observed data gleaned from service activities and connect the new knowledge with the formal knowledge obtained from classroom activities and materials.

To reflect in service learning means to think critically about and analyze emotional responses to service activities in the context of course content and the learning objectives of a particular course or curriculum. Several activities encourage reflection to occur and are included within this toolkit.

Faculty and community partners play key roles in facilitating reflection by creating a safe environment for discussion, setting guidelines for the activities, and providing feedback and assessment of the students' newly gained knowledge. Through faculty guided reflection activities, students can expand their knowledge beyond concrete facts, reach a new understanding of social problems, interpret real-life situations, compare formal and informal knowledge, propose practical and meaningful solutions to societal problems, and take informed action.

Reflection activities vary and can be both formal and informal in nature. Designing effective reflection activities often depends on the nature of the course material and the stated learning objectives in the course. Effective reflection activities with well-defined criteria for evaluation may be included in the course syllabus.

Effective Reflection:

- Links service to course objectives and fosters civic responsibility
- occurs throughout the course and not just at the end
- is structured, guided, purposeful, with well-defined criteria for evaluation
