The Greek Fathers:

The Greek Fathers Adrian Fortescue, Aeterna Press, 1908 For anyone to be called a Father involves these four conditions First he must be an Author whose works are still extant The fathers are important because they are quoted as authorities in theology Obviously then they are all people who wrote works that we can quote St Antony the Hermit St Lawrence St Sebastian are not fathers because they have left no writings Secondly he must be a Catholic who lived in the communion of the Church whose writings are correct and orthodox Otherwise the writer's authority is of no value as a witness of the Catholic faith Apollinaris of Laodicea c 390 and Tertullian 240 were learned and prolific authors but they are not fathers because they were heretics Thirdly a father is a person of eminent sanctity as well as learning The title is an honourable one given only to saints or rather it includes and involves the title of saint So Clement of Alexandria c 217 and Origenes 254 are not strictly fathers because they are not saints As a matter of fact the root of the matter in this case too is the want of orthodoxy that prevents them from being either saints or fathers The fourth criterion is antiquity This is the most difficult one to determine exactly Aeterna Press priest near Jerusalem is in most ways unlike any other father of the Church Unless we count St Bernard f 1153 one John is the last of the fathers In any case he is the last Greek father coming long after the others alone in a very different age He spent all his life under the government of a Mohammedan khalifah His work as a writer was rather to compile and arrange what the older fathers had said than to add to it He is the first of the long line of Christian Aristotelians and one of the two greatest poets of the eastern Church 2 He was with St Theodore of Studion the chief defender of images during the Iconoclast troubles and he is more than any other author the theologian studied in Orthodox colleges His treatise Of the orthodox faith is the standard text book in their schools still as St Thomas Aquinas Summa theologia is in ours And he is to them the last court of appeal in theological questions No Orthodox Christian would dare contradict St John Damascene though occasionally they have to explain what he really meant as when he writes of the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father through the Son We know too little of his life but to us also he is a very interesting and sympathetic person whose life and times form a singularly picturesque chapter of eastern Church history 1Xpv
