

PREFERRED SHARES

In January 1990, the Company sold four million of the Company's $3.875 Convertible Exchangeable Preferred shares (Convertible Preferred shares) to Nippon Life for $200 million. In May 1996, after receiving a redemption notice from the Company, Nippon Life converted all of the Convertible Preferred shares into 4,705,882 of the Company's common shares.

The Board of Directors is authorized to permit the Company to issue up to 20 million preferred shares without further shareholder approval.

NOTE 7 DERIVATIVE AND OTHER OFF-BALANCE SHEET FINANCIAL INSTRUMENTS

The Company uses derivative financial instruments for nontrading purposes to manage its exposure to interest and foreign exchange rates, financial indices and its funding costs. In addition, American Express Bank (AEB) enters into derivative contracts both to meet the needs of its clients and, to a limited extent, for proprietary trading purposes.

There are a number of risks associated with derivatives. Market risk is the possibility that the value of the derivative financial instrument will change. The Company is not exposed to market risk related to derivatives held for nontrading purposes beyond that inherent in cash market transactions. AEB is generally not subject to market risk when it enters into a contract with a client, as it usually enters into an offsetting contract or uses the position to offset an existing exposure. AEB takes proprietary positions within approved limits. These positions are monitored daily at the local and headquarters levels against Value at Risk (VAR) limits. The Company does not enter into derivative contracts with features that would leverage or multiply its market risk.

Credit risk related to derivatives and other off-balance sheet financial instruments is the possibility that the counterparty will not fulfill the terms of the contract. It is monitored through established approval procedures, including setting concentration limits by counterparty and country, reviewing credit ratings and requiring collateral where appropriate. For its trading activities with clients, AEB requires collateral when it is not willing to assume credit exposure to counterparties for either contract mark-to-market or delivery risk. A significant portion of the Company's transactions are with counterparties rated A or better by nationally recognized credit rating agencies. The Company also uses master netting agreements which allow the Company to settle multiple contracts with a single counterparty in one net receipt or payment in the event of counterparty default. Credit risk approximates the fair value of contracts in a gain position (asset) and totaled $0.8 billion and $1.4 billion at December 31, 1998 and 1997, respectively. The fair value represents the replacement cost and is determined by market values, dealer quotes or pricing models.

The following tables detail information regarding the Company's derivatives at December 31:

NONTRADING (millions)	Notional Amount	1998		1997
		Carrying Value Asset	Liability	Asset	Liability
