intelligent vehicles are becoming a reality Compared to traditional interactive design artificial intelligence provides new opportunities and challenges for the interactive design of intelligent cockpit space especially under the condition of intelligent assisted driving the driver s behavior performance multimodal interactive display interface design and evaluation Focuses on the interactive design methods of intelligent vehicles as well as forward looking design and testing methods of intelligent vehicle design Emphasizes that interactive design should be carried out using the relevant elements of intelligent system in the design of intelligent cars starting from the interactive characteristics of intelligence itself Starts from AI interactive design and combines the field of cognitive science to develop the methods and technologies of vehicle borne equipment and collaborative human computer interaction design Includes design cases from the intelligent car interaction design laboratory of Tongji University and related scientific research projects in China Automobile ,1997 Challenges in Partially Automated Driving Ignacio Solís Marcos,2018-05-14 The technological development in recent years is currently reflected in the implementation of more and more advanced driver assistance systems ADAS A clear example is found in the automated driving systems being marketed today Some of these systems are capable of controlling crucial driving tasks such as keeping the vehicle within the lane or maintaining speed and the distance with the front vehicle constant While this technology is still not mature enough to allow fully autonomous driving current systems allow partially automated driving or Level 2 SAE 2016 Level 2 automation enables feet free and for short periods hands free driving under specific situations Yet the driver is still expected to monitor the road and the system and be ready to intervene when required by the system Regarding this studies from the driving and other domains have warned about potential performance problems associated with placing operators in such monitoring role Factors such as vigilance decrements or proneness to engage in other activities have been proposed to explain these problems however their role in the context of Level 2 automation remains to be further investigated In this context the main aims of this thesis were to understand the attentional effects of monitoring a Level 2 automated system and to investigate drivers strategies to integrate additional tasks while using such system In particular the following research questions were established 1 Does monitoring a Level 2 system affect driver attention after short driving periods 2 Does Level 2 automation facilitate the performance of additional tasks 3 How do drivers integrate additional tasks into their monitoring responsibilities and how is that influenced by automation trust and experience A complementary aim of this thesis was to explore the applicability of the event related potentials ERPs technique to detect the effects of different types of ADAS i e Level 2 automation and a visual in vehicle information system IVIS on drivers attention and on specific processing resources Three studies were conducted to address the aforementioned research questions In Study I and III the participants were asked to drive Level 2 automated and manually while performing an auditory oddball task Study I or a visuomotor task Study III In Study II the participants were instructed to perform a computer tracking task with or without the support of an artificial visual IVIS while executing a secondary auditory oddball task Measurements included performance indicators from the primary and secondary tasks as well as subjective and psychophysiological measures. ERPs N1 and P3 amplitude and latencies elicited by the auditory oddball task were used to assess the participants' attentional resource allocation. Glance behaviour was also recorded to analyse drivers' visual monitoring strategies in Study III. In addition, subjective measures of mental workload, vigilance or automation trust were collected. Last driving parameters such as speed, time spent on the left lane or number of overtakings were used to account for driving strategies to integrate an additional task while driving Level 2 automated or manually. Study III As hypothesized, monitoring a Level 2 automated system for short periods led to lower perceived demands and to reductions in the allocation of attentional resources to the auditory oddball task as shown by lower amplitudes in the P3 component. Study I In Study III, driving Level 2 automated led to worse performances on an additional visuomotor task compared to when driving manually, which contradicted our expectations. Additionally, when the system was active, drivers tended to look less to the road and more to the dashboard; however, only drivers with automation experience or who perceived the system as more robust increased their visual attention to the additional task. Furthermore, the results from Study II showed that some specific ERP parameters, namely N1 latency and P3 amplitude, were also sensitive to the demands of IVIS while performing the tracking task. Based on previous studies (Young and Stanton 2002), the lower attentional resource allocation observed in Study I could reflect a cognitive underload effect induced by the Level 2 automated driving. Cognitive underload is proposed as one of the explaining mechanisms for the observed worse performances in the additional visuomotor task during the automated conditions in Study III. However, other effects such as overload or task interferences could also explain this. Finally, the results revealed by the ERPs in Studies I and II suggest that this could be a useful technique to detect alterations in drivers' attention due to the excessive high or low demands placed by different ADAS. ERPs also showed a greater diagnosticity than other measures in the detection of specific task requirements of perceptual and cognitive resources. Thus, ERPs may be useful as a complementary tool to other mental workload measures. Given that drivers need to remain attentive at all times while interacting with a Level 2 automated vehicle, the use of countermeasures to mitigate the negative attentional effects reported in this thesis is highly recommended. Specific training programs enhancing drivers' knowledge of the system or the implementation of systems that inform about the system reliability or detect inadequate driver states could be promising solutions. g re av fordon med niv 2 automation har nu m jlighet att k ra utan att anv nda pedalerna och under korta perioder v n utan att beh va styra i specifika trafiksituationer.
