

ACS Style Guide: WHAT IS IT?

ACS Style refers to the citation format of the American Chemical Society which includes over more than 50 journals. ACS style guide represents best practices within the field of chemistry. This citation style guide is based on the 3rd edition of The ACS Style Guideline: Effective Communication of Scientific Communication.

MANUSCRIPT FORMATTING: ACS recommend the following manuscript formatting:

- ACS style focuses more on precision and unambiguous writing. Sentences need to have a clear meaning that easily flows from one to the next. If not, misinterpretations might confuse the reader.
- The style recommended by the ACS is taken from already established sources such as The Chicago Manual of Style, Words into Type and the United States Government Printing Office Style Manual

Grammar, Punctuation and Spelling

Grammar, Punctuation and Spelling are covered in Chapter 9 of the ACS Style Guidelines, pp. 105-134.

- Subject Verb agreement – The subject and its verb have to agree in number. For instance, two singular subjects joined by “and” must use a plural verb, unless the plural form of the subject is used in singular effect which then uses a singular verb.
  - Ex: Growth and isolation of M13 virus were described. (plural verb)
  - Ex: Research and development is attracting a growing number of young scientists. (singular verb)
- Awkward Omissions of Verbs and Auxiliary Verbs – All subjects within a compound sentence must use the proper verb and auxiliary verb.
  - Ex: The eluant was added to the column, and the samples were collected in 10 mL increments.
- Dangling Modifiers – These are modifying words or phrases used with the intent to modify other words but fail to do so. These can be accidentally created when writing in passive voice and must be avoided.
  - Ex: When confronted with these limitations, the experiments were discontinued. (incorrect)
  - Ex: When confronted with these limitations, we discontinued the experiments.
  - In light of these limitations, the experiments were discontinued. (correct)
