

The American Scholar by Ralph Waldo Emerson

Emerson uses the text of his essay to trigger a response in the American writers, intellectuals and scholars. He begins with criticism of the fragmentation of society in terms of occupations and mercantile classes. He considers it a roadblock to true progress of society.

He encourages them to celebrate their inner truths and put it on paper. He asks them to throw off the yoke of European intellectuals and begin an era of American creation. They need to be original and independent in their thoughts, understanding and production of literature and knowledge. Self-reliance is the guiding principle of nature and every man needs to become self-reliant in order to unlock his true potential.

Understanding one's own nature and mental process holds the key to developing original writers. This is linked to the inextricable relationship between one's mind and soul. Therefore, when people read other classics, books or thesis, they should critically evaluate it rather than trying to worship it by copying it. They need to spurn the prison of the past. Our soul and spirit are manifestations of our link with the divine.

Books can help when one is unable to connect with the spirit within. This is because books have a tendency to arrest self-realization and immortalize concepts as permanent markers of reality. They also tend to differentiate between aesthetic and the rejected, which can be troublesome for the creative process of an independent individual. However, they have a purpose as far as invoking and vitalizing response, inspiring minds and empowering thinkers.

Apart from nature and books, we are influenced by experience. Until one can act and experience heroic sacrifices and emotions, he cannot write a treatise on heroism or tenacity. Actions are important to provide credibility to the words.

Emerson asserts the importance of responsibilities and duties that a scholar must adhere to. Every great mind must have a purpose greater than his own pursuit of excellence. He encourages every scholar to trust their own abilities and instincts in order to become a beacon of understanding and assurance for others. Only when simple minds can see greatness and unity with the universal within themselves, we can grow as a whole. We can transform and progress as civilization and society only when great individuals can assert and use their originality and unfiltered instincts for greater good. Such autonomy of the individual is crucial for collective growth.<

The American Scholar Ralph Waldo Emerson, 2020-09-28 I greet you on the re commencement of our literary year Our anniversary is one of hope and perhaps not enough of labor We do not meet for games of strength or skill for the recitation of histories tragedies and odes like the ancient Greeks for parliaments of love and poesy like the Troubadours nor for the advancement of science like our cotemporaries in the British and European capitals Thus far our holiday has been simply a friendly sign of the survival of the love of letters amongst a people too busy to give to letters any more As such it is precious as the sign of an indestructible instinct Perhaps the time is already come when it ought to be and will be something else when the sluggard intellect of this continent will look from under its iron lids and fill the postponed expectation of the world with something better than the exertions of mechanical skill Our day of dependence our long apprenticeship to the learning of other lands draws to a close The millions that around us are rushing into life cannot always be fed on the sere remains of foreign harvests Events actions arise that must be sung that will sing themselves Who can doubt that poetry will revive and lead in a new age as the star in the constellation Harp which now flames in our zenith astronomers announce shall one day be the pole star for a thousand years
