 - Continuity versus Discontinuity
 - Is development smooth with quantitative progressions? (gradual growth)- Continuity
 - Is development stage- like with abrupt shifts in knowledge, personality and skills? - Discontinuity (example – terrible twos, knowledge and personality)
 - Most developmentalists see the interaction of these two as the most important factor now

BOTH ARE HAPPENING

- Controversies in Developmental Psych
 - Universal vs. Context-specific argument
 - Does everyone go through the same kinds of changes at about the same time? Is development universal?
- OR
- Are there differences in how we progress through development depending on our culture and the context within which development occurs?

2. Be able to describe the normative (age-graded, history-graded) and non-normative influences on development.

Development is viewed in an historic context

 - What factors produce these changes (explanation for changes)

What's so important about description?

- When you need to see how someone is progressing
- To decide what you need to do to better something
- A way to measure
- A way to study

- Four assumptions in a life-span

- Perspective to Development
