

one of the two parties, it has more advantages than being solo. Most voters tend to associate themselves with the ruling party when making decisions to vote.

6. In any period of the American republic, has there been a stable multi-party system? No, there hasn't been a stable multi-party system.

7. Under which special circumstance can a third party elect representatives under an SMSP rule? If both the results of the ruling parties are nullified and are termed as incredible.

8. a) Civil service reform has led to decline of parties because one cannot work at a government institution and be in politics.

b) Direct primaries ensure that one representative is elected to represent them thus formation of political parties has declined.

c) Effect of communications technologies on both voters and candidates; voters are able to understand an individual's agenda and a choice is made even before elections are held.

Technology platforms have provided such information.

d) Reapportionment increased demands on the government to provide electoral posts for the underprivileged people and thus more parties lost due to lack of it.

9. Note the paradox of national party organizations reviving but at the same time having less control over those they elect. Why is this? Voters vote widely and choose whoever they wish to. Those that they help elect can move to another party if he or she wishes thus they cannot control them fully.
