With the current trends towards miniaturization high performance high quality and cost competitiveness the electrodeposition process has become an important manufacturing technology in many new microelectronic applications Gold electrodeposition plays an increasing role in processes that require this noble metal Added to these trends is the continuing and increasing emphasis on manufacturing processes which are less damaging to the environment and potentially less hazardous to the operator and personnel in the vicinity of the operation The present standard gold plating solutions are based on cyanide salts and are considered acutely hazardous solutions The trend away from their use is gaining momentum as new non hazardous gold plating solutions and manufacturing processes making use of them are developed 2 refs

Increasingly stringent stream discharge regulations have prompted an assessment of the current technology available for application to the metal finishing waste treatment problem specifically in regard to smaller operations Experimental laboratory and bench scale studies were then conducted on several unconventional wastewater treatment methods including ion flotation activated carbon adsorption acidification volatilization and solvent extraction A demonstration pilot plant study was also conducted on the activated carbon process employing actual rinse waters from a zinc cyanide plating operation The pilot scale activated carbon system was operated at 99% efficiency of cyanide removal while providing for the complete recovery and regeneration of copper Cost estimates for carbon sorption process are given
