

POST-FLIGHT CHECK

If you get disoriented or the plane gets out of control, simply take your hands off all the controls and allow the plane to stabilize. Clear your head and try to picture yourself sitting in the cockpit. Then input the required control movements to get the plane back on the correct flight path. If you run out of time or flying space and realize the plane is going toward something (ground, tree, etc.), pull the throttle back to idle and pull the elevator stick back about half way. This will reduce the speed of the plane and minimize the damage sustained.

When you are ready to land, do a couple of slow fly-bys at a safe altitude to get familiar with the plane's flying characteristics. An important factor to remember here is that you should regulate your attitude with the throttle not the elevator as you might expect. Practice raising the nose of plane slightly with a touch of "up" elevator and then using the throttle to regulate the plane's attitude. When you are ready to land, fly downward past the runway. When the plane is a hundred yards or so downwind, reduce the throttle ground at idle and turn 90 degrees towards the runway. Fly straight for a second or two until the plane is almost even with the runway. Turn 90 degrees again and fly directly towards the runway along the throttle to ground how quickly the plane is descending. Keep the nose of plane up slightly with the elevator and allow the plane to fly gently onto the runway. Do not try to stretch the glide path without increasing the throttle or the plane may stall.

POST-FLIGHT CHECK LIST

1. Be sure that both the transmitter and receiver switches are turned off.

2. Drain all excess fuel from the tank. Fuel left in the tank for extended periods can "gunk up" the tank, floats and carburetor.

3. Clean the plane with paper towels and slight-dry spray cleaner. Keeping your plane clean will make it last longer and keep tracking nice.

4. Put a few drops of after-run or light oil in the carburetor and turn the prop over a few times (without the glow plug inserted) to distribute the oil throughout the engine.

5. Inspect the prop and replace if any chips or cracks are found.

6. Inspect the entire plane for covering tears, new dings and dents, loose screws and conical connectors and any other wear and/or tear.

7. Use a voltmeter to check the receiver/battery voltage. If it is low, you now know not to fly so long next time. If it is still high, you should be able to fly a little longer next session.

SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

1. Wear safety glasses when starting and running all model engines.

2. Model engine fuel is very flammable and the fumes are very dangerous because they are almost invisible! Do not smoke or allow sparks, high heat or other flames near the fuel.

3. Do not run model engines inside garages or other closed rooms as they give off large amounts of deadly carbon monoxide gas.

4. Do not run model engines around gravel, sand or other loose debris. These materials will be ingested through the carburetor and can also be kicked up by the prop.

5. Always stay behind the propeller when the engine is running. Make all engine adjustments from behind the engine. Under no circumstances should you allow your face or body near the plane or rotation of the propeller when the engine is running.

6. Do not allow loose clothing or other accessories close to the prop.

7. To stop an engine, cut off the fuel or air supply to the engine. Do not throw rags or other objects near the prop to stop the engine.

8. Do not touch the engine or muffler during or right after it has been running (gets very hot).

9. If you hear any unusual noises while your plane is flying, land at once and determine the problem before returning to the air. Control surface flutter, which often emits a low pitched buzz, can quickly destroy an airplane and should not be ignored. Flutter is usually caused by sloppy control surfaces and is generally relatively easy to cure.
