

Duty and Honor: The Seven ARMY Values

4 pages | 840 words

SOLDIERS are trained to abide by the code of the "Seven ARMY Values," shortened to as 'LDRSHIP' in abbreviation which represents "Loyalty, Duty, Respect, Selfless Service, Honor, Integrity, and Personal Courage." These principles are taught continually commencing day one during Elementary Combat Exercise, and SOLDIERS memorize them while training to live by them (Brinsfield, 1998) actively. The seven fundamental SOLDIERS morals and how they relate to the work in the Military are discussed below. Loyalty is bearing fundamental belief and commitment to one's country system of laws, the Military, and other ARMY crew. It is through trusting in and dedicating oneself to someone or something (Moten, 2010). To be a faithful ARMY is to upkeep the guidance and believe in the acts they lead as frontrunners. Example, by putting the fatigues it displays their devotion and pledge to the ARMY. Responding to orders likewise demonstrates their faithfulness to their command and of the unit. Duty is to fulfill one's commitments. Undertaking a responsibility is additional to taking tasks allocated. 'Duty' is also being capable of completing errands as a portion of a group. The ARMY is continuously in motion due to the need to complete many missions daily (Brinsfield, 1998). Assignment after assignment compiled on top of one another is what they do nonstop throughout the ARMY careers. With all of the mentioned responsibilities, the ARMY needs "Duty" to fulfill their obligations as a part of a unit. Minus 'duty' in the job setting, the ARMY would dodge responsibilities hence hindering the nobility of the achievement of an operation. Respect is the sense of worth or personal value that a person attaches to someone. Each ARMY is accountable for handling another with self-worth and admiration. SOLDIERS vow to treat others with esteem and self-respect while not awaiting repayment. Respect lets them acknowledge what the superiors and associates do for them. Respect is the anticipation of faith that individuals will accomplish their responsibilities and do their duties accordingly. Oneself is an essential feature of the Soldier worth of respect. The ARMY is one squad, and collectively, they have something to give. It can be self-consciousness, personality, comprehension, belief, morality, and an optimistic outlook. Respect is paramount; therefore if someone has to respect themselves, then they are appreciated. "Selfless Service" is putting the wellbeing of the country, the "ARMY" and that of aides above oneself. 'Selfless service' is not only about oneself but also for one's peers and leaders who can affect the way you look at it (Brinsfield, 1998). For instance, it takes the inspirations of other ARMY members around someone, propelling the person to remain an unselfish combatant. When serving one's country, SOLDIERS are loyally doing their duty without thought of recognition, which is a genuine selfless service. 'Honor' is living up to the SOLDIERS' ethics. A SOLDIER or ARMY CIVILIANS gain it through a person's respect for loyalty and selfless service. A person's word represents and shows his or her honor. For example, if someone does not uphold their word, they are not trusted or respected; therefore, the person has no reputation. ARMY members who uphold the entire Soldier...
