What I wanted to hear didn't exist, so it was necessary for me to go out and create it.
— Richard Thompson

The driving force behind any successful venture can usually be boiled down to one simple concept — "Give people what they want." Clever marketers know that consumers often choose "wants" over "needs," and we can see this play out every day whenever lottery tickets are sold. It's the fantasy of winning that people are really buying with a lottery ticket — the dream of how their lives will change if they hit a winning number.

A similar fantasy often fuels the quest for tone. You can spend a lot of time and money playing the lottery with all kinds of gear, especially when the latest discussion page thread, magazine ad or review pinpoints equipment that you may not be able to hear without traveling to a store located hundreds of miles away or by listening to a sound clip played through desktop speakers. With thousands of new and old amps, guitars, speakers and effects to choose from, what are your odds
