Norman, 1911 In the following pages I have endeavoured to give a brief description of the various actions the names of which are emblazoned on the colours and appointments of the regiments in the British army So far as I have been able I have shown the part that each individual corps has played in every engagement by appending to the account a return of the losses suffered Unfortunately in some cases casualty rolls are not obtainable in others owing to the returns having been hurriedly prepared and later corrections neglected the true losses of regiments do not appear The whole question of the award of battle honours abounds in anomalies Paltry skirmishes have been immortalized and many gallant fights have been left unrecorded In some cases certain corps have been singled out for honour others which bore an equal share in the same day's doings have been denied the privilege of assuming the battle honour In some campaigns every skirmish has been handed down to posterity in others one word has covered long years of fighting Mysore with its one honour and Persia with four are cases in point In some instances honours have been refused on the plea that the headquarters of the regiment was not present in the action in others the honour has been granted when but a single troop or company has shared in the fight There are regiments whose colours bear the names of battles in which they did not lose a single man others have suffered heavy losses in historic battles which are as yet unrecorded At Schellenberg for example Marlborough's earliest victory and one unaccountably absent from our colours the losses of the fifteen regiments engaged exceeded the total casualties of the whole army in the campaign in Afghanistan from 1879 to 1881 for which no less than seven battle honours were granted Esprit de corps is the keystone of the discipline of the British army and the regimental colours are the living symbol of that esprit de corps It is to their colours that men look as the emblems of their regimental history and on those colours are or should be emblazoned the names of all historic battles in which the regiment has been engaged A soldier knows or ought to know the history of his own regiment but the moment arrives when his curiosity is piqued and he wishes to learn something about a corps which has fought side by side with his own Perchance curiosity may be excited as to the reason why Copenhagen appears on the appointments of the Rifle Brigade and Arabia on the colours of the York and Lancaster or how it comes about that Dominica is alone borne by the Cornwalls and Pondicherry by the Dublin Fusiliers I have made no attempt to deal exhaustively with the subject that would be beyond my powers and would open up too wide a field I have therefore touched but lightly on those campaigns such as the Peninsular and Waterloo which are familiar to everyone in the least conversant with the history of his country and have dwelt in more detail with those wars which are less well known Memories are short Already the South African War has been effaced by that titanic struggle between Russia and Japan How then can the ordinary man be expected to carry in his mind even the rough outline of the Defence of Chitral an episode which rivals Arcot in the heroism of its few defenders or of Mangalore and Corygaum which were in no way inferior in point of steadfast gallantry When I read of the efforts made to insure the regular supply of jam during the South African War my mind turns to Chitral where the daily ration for six long weeks was one pound of flour a day rice and meat being issued only on the doctors orders the one antiseptic available being carbolic tooth powder Or I think of Mangalore which capitulated after Campbell had cut up his last horse and served out his last ration of flour To be continue in this ebook
