Chapters in this book include original research or reviews which report the relevance of the endocannabinoid system by describing the results of experimental evidence about the neurobiological role of the endocannabinoid system. The main topics include but are not limited to: The genetics of cannabinoid CB1 and CB2 receptors and their tissue distribution; their splicing variants and polymorphisms; and the possible implications of all this in determining different behaviours as well as various pathological conditions and the addiction to substances of abuse. Pharmacological approaches describing the potential use in the central nervous system disorders of endocannabinoid based drugs such as cannabinoid receptor agonists and antagonists; inhibitors of endocannabinoid inactivation processes; and even plant cannabinoids other than THC and with a molecular mechanism of action. The role of the endocannabinoid system in several neurological and neuropsychiatric conditions such as epilepsy.
