Reading and Writing Redhead

Why Did People Move to North America? Immigrant

There are many reasons people moved to North America hundreds of years ago. Some people came to America so they could have freedom. In other countries, kings and rulers didn't always let people practice their own religion. The pilgrims who came to America in 1620 came for religious freedom.

Some people came to America because they wanted a better life. In Europe in the 1800s people would say that in America, the "rivers were paved with gold." That meant people thought there was a lot of money in America.

Other people came to America because wars made many people's home countries dangerous. Also, famine led many people to come to America. For example, from 1845 to 1850, the Irish potato famine led most of the potato crop to die. There was not enough food for people and because money flowing to America meant they would have a better life.

Why did people move to North America? In the past, people came to America so they could have freedom. In other countries, people could not always do what they wanted.

Some people came to America because they wanted a better life. People thought they could get better jobs and make more money in America than in their home country. Other people came to America to be safe. Wars made many people's home countries dangerous. Also, some people's home countries did not have enough food so they moved to America. Having to America meant they would have a better life.
