

The assignment requires running the MCL (Manual Control Lab) software and measuring human operator performance in a single degree of freedom compensatory task.

Setup and software execution instructions:

1. Extract files from the archive
2. Execute the <mmslab2> application file.

Set up the following conditions for the simulated control task:

Experiment name: ME212HW9

Subject name: <your B #>

Tracking task: Disturbance, Compensatory

It is suggested to leave all other setting unchanged.

Complete the following:

1. Perform a series of 10 experimental runs. Save data for each run your make. Saving data options can be found under the Output/Raw Data tab. Select <Save as MATLAB (.m) file> option.
2. Write a MATLAB script to identify the ToT (time-on-target), i.e. cumulative time over which the cursor remains within the target square) for each recorded run. Hint: you'll need the <error-x> signal (this is the 6-th column of the data saved at the end of each run). The threshold value when the cursor leaves the target box is 0.1 in either direction.
3. Plot the ToT data from all test runs on a single plot. This is your learning curve. You can expect that the ToT will asymptotically converge to some value over "time" (i.e. the increasing number of experiments).
4. Using the function provided to you (smPSD.m) plot the Power ^TSpectrum Density (PSD) of the operator control signal <input-x> (this is the 2nd column of the data saved at the end of each run) for each run you complete and record.
5. Publish your code and plots in a pdf document. Make sure that all plots are properly annotated.
6. Submit all your work via Brightspace: PDF file from (5) and Zip archive containing raw data files and your (.m) files.
