Abstract

Small and medium enterprises (SMEs) in the manufacturing sector are increasingly adopting advanced technologies like computer vision and artificial intelligence (AI) to optimize their operations. These innovations are transforming quality control and inventory management, addressing key challenges such as human error, inefficiencies, and inaccuracies. Computer vision enables automated, real-time inspection of products, ensuring consistent quality standards and reducing waste. AI-powered inventory systems enhance accuracy by predicting demand, streamlining stock management, and minimizing overstock or shortages. This paper explores how SMEs can integrate these technologies to achieve operational excellence, improve productivity, and remain competitive in dynamic markets. By leveraging AI-driven insights and computer vision capabilities, SMEs can reduce costs, enhance customer satisfaction, and comply with stringent industry standards. The discussion highlights implementation strategies, potential barriers, and future trends in the adoption of these technologies, providing a roadmap for SMEs seeking to modernize their manufacturing processes and embrace Industry 4.0.
