

PROTECTING PUBLIC HEALTH

Santa Cruz County's Communicable Disease Unit (CDU) protects community health by investigating and responding to outbreaks and infectious diseases of public health concern.

A community member becomes ill with an infectious disease.

Following a medical visit, a health care provider diagnoses the person. A lab test and result are often needed to confirm the diagnosis.

REPORT

The law requires health care providers and labs to report certain diseases to the local health department.

CDU receives reports for the residents of Santa Cruz County.

CDU RESPONDS

1. INVESTIGATE

CDU Staff interview the sick person to learn more about where the person has been and who they were around while they were sick.

2. TAKE ACTION

Depending on the situation, the sick person may have to isolate by staying home from work or school. CDU Staff help ensure the person gets the correct care and treatment.

3. EDUCATE

CDU Staff educate the sick person, their contacts, health care providers, and community members about the disease.

4. MONITOR

CDU Staff continue to watch for new cases by working with health care facilities and other partners. In some cases, a sick person's close contacts may be contacted and closely monitored for symptoms.

5. ANALYZE

CDU Staff also analyze the data they receive and report their findings to the California Department of Public Health. This helps our current and future work on disease outbreaks.
