

Hydraulics

1. Basic Hydraulics

The hydraulic system lesson covers the principles of Pascal's law, which says that the pressure in any enclosed fluid is uniform in all directions. Pascal's law is illustrated in Figure 1. The basic principle that is shown is the multiplying effect of pressure and that area of surface. As the pressure is the same in all the directions, the smaller piston feels a smaller force and displacement than a larger one. Therefore, a large force can be generated with a small force by using hydraulic systems. These small force components allow, even hydraulic systems have a continuous fluid arrangement in addition to being through cylinders. Fluids are used in a lot of other areas of a pump, injector, electrical lines, check valves, pressure gauges, relief valves, etc., etc., etc.

2. Pumps

Classification of Pumps

Pumps are classified as either positive displacement or pressure dependent. A positive displacement pump produces a constant flow of fluid, whereas a pressure dependent pump produces a constant flow of fluid. The output of a pressure dependent pump is proportional to the pressure applied to the pump. A positive displacement pump is a pump that produces a constant flow of fluid, regardless of the pressure applied to the pump. A pressure dependent pump is a pump that produces a constant flow of fluid, regardless of the pressure applied to the pump. A positive displacement pump is a pump that produces a constant flow of fluid, regardless of the pressure applied to the pump. A pressure dependent pump is a pump that produces a constant flow of fluid, regardless of the pressure applied to the pump. A positive displacement pump is a pump that produces a constant flow of fluid, regardless of the pressure applied to the pump. A pressure dependent pump is a pump that produces a constant flow of fluid, regardless of the pressure applied to the pump.
