

Rat Dissection

(Rattus norvegicus)

Introduction

In this laboratory, the anatomy of the rat will be examined in detail. The rat is a vertebrate mammal, which means that many aspects of its structural organization are common with humans. The similarity of structures among related organisms shows evidence of common ancestry. In a way, studying the rat is like studying a human. As the leading theme of this lab, ask yourself: for every structure observed in the rat, there is an equivalent structure in your own body - what is the structure and where is it located? How do these organs and organ systems make my body function?

Pay particular attention to the relationships among organs and groups of organs. Structural parts are not "just there" in random locations. Their specific layout within the body contributes to making certain functions possible. Therefore, for every structure seen, you should determine the following:

- Its function
- What organ system it belongs to
- How it is connected with other components

The specimen you will receive is a preserved double-injected specimen. Double injected refers to the arteries being filled with a red latex, and the veins being filled with blue latex. You will notice various incisions on the external surface of the rat where the latex was injected.

Dissection Guidelines

TRY! You are expected to try to locate structures before asking for assistance. Using the instructions and diagrams, you should be able to locate many structures by yourself. If after a good effort, you cannot find a structure, ask for help. Remember, this is a learning experience; it is permissible to discuss and observe other students' specimens. Compare your dissection with others and be sure to look at animals of the opposite sex.

Dissecting Tools will be used to open the body cavity of the rat and observe the structures. Dissecting does not mean "to cut up"; in fact, it means "to expose to view". Careful dissecting techniques will be needed to observe all the structures and their connections to other structures. You will not need to use a scalpel. Contrary to popular belief, a scalpel is not the best tool for dissection. Scissors serve better because the point of the scissors can be pointed upwards to prevent damaging organs underneath. Always raise structures to be cut with your forceps before cutting, so that you can see exactly what is underneath and where the incision should be made. Never cut more than is absolutely necessary to expose a part.

Grading: Your grade on this laboratory will be assessed according to the following criteria: Class Participation (observed by teacher), Lab Checklist, Oral Quizzes, Labeled Biological drawings from specimen of (1) Interior of Abdominal cavity prior to removal of organs, (2) thoracic cavity showing heart and lungs.
