Introducing the Sociology of Religion

Sigmund Freud

- "Religion is an illusion and it derives its strength from its readiness to fit in with our instinctual wishful impulses." Freud (1933).
- "Religion is an attempt to master the sensory world in which we are situated by means of the wishful world which we have developed within us as a result of biological and psychological necessities ... If we attempt to assign the place of religion in the evolution of mankind, it appears not as a permanent acquisition but as a counterpart to the neurosis which individual civilized men have to go through in their passage from childhood to maturity." Freud (1993)

Sigmund Freud and Religion

- It is important to note that Sigmund Freud was an atheist who grew up in a Jewish background.
- Sigmund Freud essentially believed that religion was a form of "Wish Fulfilment" that provided psychological comfort to people in the face of harsh realities of life.
- According to Freud religion is a way for people to cope with the fear and uncertainty of what exactly the future holds.
- He believed that religion is primarily based on the "Oedipus complex".

Oedipus Complex

This is one of the theories that Freud developed. It explains the psychological development of children and their dependent relationships with their parents (Children depend on their parents, they need their parents) in the same way he asserted that religion was rooted in psychological needs rather than in objective reality.
