Many people have heard that the best way to lose weight is to eat less and exercise more. But what if you could lose weight without changing your diet or exercise routine? That's the promise of a new study from the University of California, San Diego, which found that a specific type of bacteria in the gut can help with weight loss. The study, published in the journal Nature, found that mice with a certain type of gut bacteria lost weight more easily than mice without it. The researchers are now working to identify the specific bacteria and how they work, which could lead to new treatments for obesity.
