Students are sometimes confused about the proper mix of original work and material (with citations) from outside sources that is appropriate in academic writing assignments. This can lead to problems ranging from a bad grade on the assignment to a charge of plagiarism. In the example below, we consider in detail an example of a properly written paragraph from an actual student paper (used with the permission of its author) on technical aspects of HIPAA, the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act. This is only a general guide to good academic writing; the format shown is similar to the APA reference format. Each student should make sure to understand the instructor's specific requirements in any specific writing assignment.

The general rule is that you use citations and, where necessary, quotation marks in the body of your work to show where you have used the words and ideas of others. You provide references at the end of the work to allow others to find the information you used. The differences for different classes will be in the form by which you show this information, not in whether to include it.

Here is the example paragraph; the references cited in it are included below the line of asterisks:

The HIPAA rules provide for civil and criminal penalties for misuse or disclosure of protected health information. There may also be a right of individual action if a covered entity fails to comply with its own published notices of information practices (Christiansen, 2000). As Margret Amatayakul writes, "The healthcare industry will be left to establish its own baseline, and will likely be judged on the basis of 'common practice' within the framework of the rules" (Amatayakul, 2000). These common practices establish a standard of care against which health care institutions will likely be measured. Health care institutions must not assume that compliance with the HIPAA security rule will automatically offer the protections needed for compliance with the privacy rule. The privacy rule applies to all protected health information, but the security rule applies only to electronic protected health information (Gardner Carton & Douglas LLP, 2003).

Downs of Child Language Andrea Gualmini, 2014-04-08 The new experimental evidence presented in The Ups and Downs of Child Language shows that it is possible to extend research on child language to children's semantic competence adopting the same theoretical framework that has proven useful to the study of children's syntactic competence Andrea Gualmini investigates the role of entailment relations for child language in a series of interconnected experiments assessing children's negation and their interpretation of words like or every and some Comparing his study to other models of language acquisition and characterizing the observed differences between children and adults Gualmini asserts that even in the domain of semantic competence there is no reason to assume that child language differs from adult language in ways that would exceed the boundary conditions imposed by Universal Grammar Teaching Academic Writing in European Higher Education Lennart Björk, Gerd Bräuer, L. Department of Iowa State University U S A I was fortunate to attend as a visitor from the U S the first European Association for the Teaching of Academic Writing EATAW conference in 2001 at Groningen I was struck by the similarities in the challenges higher education faces on both sides of the Atlantic in terms of developing students' academic writing and students learning through writing It is indeed an international problem But I was equally struck by the profound differences in responding to these challenges among nations institutions disciplines and even within disciplines The essays in this extraordinary volume address a growing demand for help with academic writing on the part of students and academic staff alike And they do so in ways that bring fresh approaches not only to Europeans who have only recently begun to study academic writing but also to researchers and academic staff in the U S where we have a century old tradition of attention to the problem but are much in need of these fresh approaches Academic writing has become a problem in higher education all around the world because higher education sits smack between two contradictory pressures On one end far more students and far more diverse students come streaming into higher education bringing in a far greater diversity of linguistic resources often interpreted as standards are falling as Frank Haacke Tente point out Chicago Style Essentials: A Handbook for
