

Amplitude

The distance from the position of a particle to its maximum displacement from its rest position. A wave with a constant amplitude is called an undistorted or linear wave. The restoring force is directly related to the distance from the rest position, and the speed of propagation of a wave is not changing.

The graph shows the amplitude of a wave is constant. The wave is called an undistorted or linear wave.

Standing Waves

Standing waves are formed by the interference of two waves traveling in opposite directions.

Node

A point in a wave where the displacement is zero. The displacement is zero at all times.

Standing wave

Antinode

A point in a wave where the displacement is maximum. The displacement is maximum at all times. The displacement is zero at all times.

Reflection

Wave Interference

When two waves meet, they can interfere. If the crests of two waves meet, the resulting wave has a larger amplitude. If the troughs of two waves meet, the resulting wave has a smaller amplitude.

When two waves meet, they can interfere. If the crests of two waves meet, the resulting wave has a larger amplitude. If the troughs of two waves meet, the resulting wave has a smaller amplitude. This is called constructive interference and destructive interference.
