New York Magazine, 1987-02-16 New York magazine was born in 1968 after a run as an insert of the New York Herald Tribune and quickly made a place for itself as the trusted resource for readers across the country With award winning writing and photography covering everything from politics and food to theater and fashion the magazine's consistent mission has been to reflect back to its audience the energy and excitement of the city itself while celebrating New York as both a place and an idea

Commercial Culture Leo Bogart, 2017-09-29 American mass media are the world's most diverse rich and free Their dazzling resources variety and influence arouse envy in other countries Their failures are commonly excused on the grounds that they are creatures of the market that they give people what they want Commercial Culture focuses not on the glories of the media but on what is wrong with them and why and how they may be made better This powerful critique of American mass communication highlights four trends that sound an urgent call for reform the blurring of distinctions among traditional media and between individual and mass communication the increasing concentration of media control in a disturbingly small number of powerful organizations the shift from advertisers to consumers as the source of media revenues and the growing confusion of information and entertainment of the real and the imaginary The future direction of the media Leo Bogart contends should not be left to market forces alone He shows how the public's appetite for media differs from other demands the market is left to satisfy because of how profoundly the media shape the public's character and values Bogart concludes that a world of new communications technology requires a coherent national media policy respectful of the American tradition of free expression and subject to vigorous public scrutiny and debate Commercial Culture is a comprehensive analysis of the media as they evolve in a technological age It will appeal to general readers interested in mass communications as well as professionals and scholars studying American mass media

Videoland Daniel Herbert, 2014-01-24 Videoland offers a comprehensive view of the tangible phase of consumer video when Americans largely accessed movies as material commodities at video rental stores Video stores served as a vital locus of movie culture from the early 1980s until the early 2000s changing the way Americans socialized around movies and collectively made movies meaningful. When films became tangible as magnetic tapes and plastic discs, movie culture flowed out from the theater and the living room entered the public retail space and became conflated with shopping and salesmanship. In this process, video stores served as a crucial embodiment of movie culture's historical move toward increased flexibility, adaptability, and customization. In addition to charting the historical rise and fall of the rental industry, Herbert explores the architectural design of video stores, the social dynamics of retail encounters, the video distribution industry, the proliferation of video recommendation guides, and the often surprising persistence of the video store as an adaptable social space of consumer culture. Drawing on ethnographic fieldwork, cultural geography, and archival research, Videoland provides a wide-ranging exploration of the pivotal role video stores played in the history of motion pictures and is a must read for students and scholars of media history.

Meta Television. Erin Giannini, 2024-03-18. The idea of metatextuality is frequently framed as a recent television development and often paired with the idea that it represents genre exhaustion. US television, however, with its early live performances and set-bound sitcoms, always suggested an element of self-awareness that easily shaded into metatextuality even in its earliest days. Meta Television thus traces the general history of US television's metatextuality throughout television's history, arguing that TV's self-awareness is nothing new and certainly not evidence of a period of aesthetic exhaustion but instead is woven into both its past and present practice, elucidated through case studies featuring series from the 1970s to the present day, many of which have not been critically analyzed before, and the various ways they deploy metatext to both construct and deconstruct their narratives. Further, Meta Television asserts that this re- and deconstruction of narrative and production isn't just a reward to the savvy and/or knowledgeable viewer or consumer but seeks to make broader points about the media we consume and how we consume it. This book explores the ways in which the current metatextual turn in both the usual genres in which it appears (horror and sci-fi/fantasy) and its movement into drama and sitcom represents the next turn in television's inherent self-awareness. It traces this element throughout television's history, growing from the more modest reflexivity of programs' awareness of themselves as created objects in a particular medium to the more significant breaking of the fictive illusion and therefore the perceived distance between the audience and the series. Erin Giannini shows how the increased currency of metatextual television in the contemporary era can be tied to a viewership well-versed in its stories and production as well as able and willing to talk back via social media. If television reflects culture to a certain extent, this increased reflexivity mirrors that responsive audience as a consequence of the lack of distance that metafiction embraces As Robert Stam traced the use and implications of reflexivity in film and literature this book does the same for television further problematizing John Ellis's glance theory in terms of both production and spectatorship      PC Mag ,2003-03-25 PCMag.com is a leading authority on technology delivering Labs based independent reviews of the latest products and services Our expert industry analysis and practical solutions help you make better buying decisions and get more from technology      The Computer Engineering Handbook Vojin G.
