Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0 to 3.5 miles per hour. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measurements of weight, body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measurements of self-esteem, depression, and anxiety. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in weight, BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in depression and anxiety. The control group did not show any significant changes in physical or psychological health. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

QUESTION I have a 1994 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The car has been running fine for the last 10 years, but recently I've noticed a slight vibration in the front end when driving at highway speeds. I've checked the tire pressure and found it to be correct. I've also noticed that the front end seems to be slightly lower than the rear end. Could this be a sign of a problem with the suspension or steering system?

ANSWER The vibration you're experiencing is likely due to a problem with the front suspension or steering system. The fact that the front end seems lower than the rear end suggests a sagging spring or a worn shock absorber. I recommend having a professional mechanic inspect the front suspension and steering system. They can check the condition of the springs, shocks, struts, and steering components. If any of these parts are worn or damaged, they should be replaced. Additionally, they can check the alignment of the front end. If the alignment is off, it can cause a vibration in the front end. Once the problem is identified, the mechanic can recommend the best course of action to fix it.

QUESTION

1. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse presents with a 2-week history of abdominal pain, weight loss, and vomiting. Physical examination reveals a distended abdomen with a fluid wave and a positive Murphy's sign. Laboratory studies show a white blood cell count of 12,000/mm<sup>3</sup> with a left shift. What is the most likely diagnosis?

ANSWER

1. Acute pancreatitis

EXPLANATION

1. The patient's history of alcohol abuse, abdominal pain, weight loss, and vomiting, along with physical findings of a distended abdomen with a fluid wave and a positive Murphy's sign, and laboratory findings of a white blood cell count of 12,000/mm<sup>3</sup> with a left shift, are all consistent with acute pancreatitis. The most common cause of acute pancreatitis is alcohol abuse, followed by gallstones. The pathophysiology of acute pancreatitis involves the activation of pancreatic enzymes, leading to autodigestion of the pancreas and surrounding tissues. This results in inflammation, edema, and necrosis of the pancreas. The clinical presentation is typically characterized by severe, persistent abdominal pain, often radiating to the back, and vomiting. Weight loss may be observed due to decreased oral intake and malabsorption. Physical examination may reveal a distended abdomen with a fluid wave, indicating ascites, and a positive Murphy's sign, suggesting inflammation of the gallbladder. Laboratory studies often show an elevated white blood cell count with a left shift, indicating a systemic inflammatory response.

QUESTION A 60-year-old male with a 20-year history of type 2 diabetes mellitus presents with a 2-week history of increasing fatigue, weight loss, and decreased appetite. He reports that he has been unable to eat as much as he used to and has lost about 10 pounds. He also mentions that he has been feeling more tired than usual and has noticed some changes in his vision. He has no recent travel history and no known contact with anyone who has been ill. He is currently on insulin therapy and has no other chronic medications. His last medical check-up was 6 months ago, where his blood sugar levels were well-controlled. He is a retired construction worker and lives with his wife. He has no smoking history and consumes alcohol occasionally. He is concerned about the possibility of a serious illness and is seeking medical advice.

ANSWER The patient's symptoms are suggestive of a systemic illness, possibly a malignancy, given the chronic nature of the symptoms and the weight loss. The most common malignancy associated with these symptoms is pancreatic cancer, which often presents with weight loss, fatigue, and changes in vision. However, other conditions such as hyperthyroidism, chronic infection, or a severe nutritional deficiency could also cause these symptoms. A thorough physical examination, including a detailed history of the present illness and a review of the patient's medical history, is essential. Laboratory tests, including a complete blood count, comprehensive metabolic panel, and possibly a tumor marker like CA 19-9, should be ordered. Imaging studies, such as a CT scan of the abdomen, may be necessary to identify any structural abnormalities. The patient should be referred to a primary care physician or an endocrinologist for further evaluation and management.
