Who Owns the Future? Tony Kearney, 2012-03-20 With the world being inundated with facts and statistics about everything from global warming and climate change to GM food to energy and resource crises to poverty and alienation it is easy to be swamped and overcome by the seeming uncertainty and apparent impossibility of it all This book merges themes of environmentalism philosophy science psychology language sociology metaphysics religion gender relationships politics poverty population and much more towards finding frameworks about how the human race can address the awesome challenges facing it both now and into the future The book pulls no punches about the peril of our current situation but essentially offers an optimistic and realistic view of the future based on the premise that the human race can successfully change and adapt its behaviour in order to survive and flourish The question is however will it make those changes And will you

Summary of Jaron Lanier's Who Owns the Future? Everest Media, 2022-05-09T22:59:00Z Please note This is a companion version not the original book Sample Book Insights 1 The price we pay for the illusion of free information is that most of the overall economy isn't about information Eventually most productivity will become software mediated This could lead to a period of hyper unemployment and political and social chaos 2 People are becoming poorer than they need to be because popular digital designs do not treat people as being special enough in the digital world People are treated as small elements in a bigger information machine when in fact people are the only sources or destinations of information 3 The primary influence on the way technologists think about the future is their direct experience of digital networks through consumer electronics As information technology becomes millions of times more powerful any particular use of it becomes cheaper 4 The cloud is driven by statistics and even in the worst individual cases of personal ignorance dullness idleness or irrelevance every person is constantly feeding data into the cloud these days The value of such information could be treated as genuine but it is not
